Safety risk management

FRANKLYN WORK SAFETY

Injury Prevention and Risk Management Solutions

Safety risk management involves identifying the hazards in the work environment, and then applying the relevant legislative requirements and acknowledged safety precautions for managing those hazards.

Management Obligations

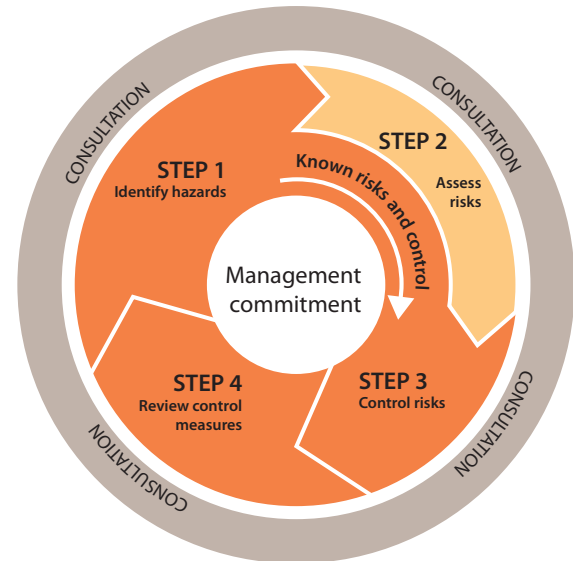

Managers have legislated obligations to ensure that they apply due diligence in managing the hazards of the business. These obligations effectively exist in both the OSH Act 1984 (the current WA OSH legislation), and in the Work Health and Safety Act (the current Commonwealth legislation and soon to be applicable for all WA businesses). Implementing sound safety risk management goes a substantial way to fulfilling these obligations.

Sound safety risk management involves undertaking risk assessment for operations in a manner that provides effective hazard management, meets legislated requirements and provides clear documented evidence of considered thought in managing work hazards. To achieve this risk management must incorporate the following elements:

- consultation with workers
- relevant hazards identification methods
- compliance with regulations
- consideration of common industry standards and guidance
- maintenance of up to date valid risk management documents

The most common and effective methods used to comply with risk management requirements are:

- Safety risk registers - a log of work hazards and their associated controls
- Documented risk assessments - an assessment of the hazards associated with a particular operation or piece of equipment.
